How to use this cheat sheet

Fifty-eight agents is a lot to meet at once. That is the single biggest reason people buy a tool like this, poke at it for ten minutes, and never open it again.

This sheet fixes that with three rules.

RULE 1

Work by category, not by list

The agents are grouped into six departments. Find the department that matches the job in front of you today. Ignore the other five entirely until you need them.

RULE 2

Run the "first task" exactly as written

Every agent below has a suggested first task. It is deliberately small and deliberately real — a job you already needed done. Running it once teaches you that agent's output shape faster than any tutorial.

RULE 3

Chain second, solo first

The real power is passing one agent's output into another. But do not start there. Get five solo wins, then start chaining.

The 5-agent rule: pick five agents that map to work you do every single week. Master those. The other fifty-three are there for when the job appears — you do not need them today, and pretending otherwise is how overwhelm wins.

Your first five

Write the five agent names you will actually use this week. Not the ones that sound impressive — the ones that match work already sitting on your desk.

- ☐ Agent 1: _____ First task: _____
- ☐ Agent 2: _____ First task: _____
- ☐ Agent 3: _____ First task: _____
- ☐ Agent 4: _____ First task: _____
- ☐ Agent 5: _____ First task: _____

Three chains worth building once you are comfortable

The content chain

Keyword Researcher → Blog Post Writer → Headline Generator → Repurposing Agent → LinkedIn Post Writer. One keyword becomes a post, a title set, and a week of social.

The client chain

Market Researcher → Cold Outreach Writer → Follow-Up Sequencer → Proposal Writer → Client Onboarding Agent. Cold name to signed client without leaving the dashboard.

The delivery chain

Data Analyzer → Chart Recommender → Report Generator → Presentation Builder. Raw client numbers become a report you can hand over and charge for.

Next: open Bonus #3, The First-Hour Fast Start, and run your first agent inside sixty minutes. Momentum beats planning.
